

Jesuit Social Services works to build a just society by advocating for social change and promoting the health and wellbeing of disadvantaged young people, families and communities

Our mission

Standing in solidarity with those in need
Expressing a faith that promotes justice

Our values

- Welcoming – forming strong, faithful relationships
- Discerning – being strategic about how we can have the greatest impact
- Courageous – standing up boldly to effect change.

The heart of our work is to build relationships.

In all our services we want to enable people to relate well to others and so to take an active part in the community.

Only when people form relationships can they come to trust again. When they trust, they may imagine new possibilities and pursue them.

We don't give up on people.

Your support

Since 1977 we have worked with people with no one to support them. They have been abused, neglected and isolated. We have defended their rights.

We work with young people who have been imprisoned. We have supported them as they move from prison into the community.

We also work with young people who have been mentally ill and trapped by alcohol and drugs. We open the way for them to be educated and employed.

We work with vulnerable families and communities. We help them to become resilient and resourceful.

In all our work we look for people in most need.

- advocate courageously for a more just society.

‘Making your Will is, perhaps, one of the most important things you will do during your lifetime.

It gives you an opportunity to safeguard the future of those you care about — your family, friends, communities and organisations like ours that reach out to neglected people.’

Julie Edwards
CEO, Jesuit Social Services
